CHAPTER XI. I Receive a Call.

Going to bed at three o'clock on a winter morning in a house whose ways are disquieting, after a duel in which you escaped whole only by sheer good luck, does not fit one for sleep. When I finally drew the covers over me it was to lie and speculate upon the events of the night in connection with the history of the few weeks I had spent at Glenarm. Larry and suggested in New York that Pickering was playing some deep game, and I, myself, could not accept Pickering's statement that my grandfather's large fortune had proved to be a myth. If Pickering had not stolen or dissipated it, where was it concealed? Morgan was undoubtedly looking for something of value or he would not risk his life in the business; and it was quite possible that he was employed by Pickering to search for hidden property. This idea took strong hold of me, the more readily, I fear, since I had always been anxious to see evil in Pickering. There was, to be sure, the unknown alternative heir, but neither she nor Sister Theresa was, I imagined, a person capable of hiring an assassin to kill me.

On reflection I dismissed the idea of appealing to the county authorities, and I never regretted that resolution. The seat of Wabana county was 20 miles away, the processes of law were unfamiliar, and I wished to avoid publicity. Morgan might, of course, have been easily disposed of by an appeal to the Annandale constable, but now that I suspected Pickering of treachery the caretaker's importance dwindled. I had wanted all my life for a chance at Arthur Pickering, and in this affair I hoped to draw him into the open and settle with him.

I slept presently but woke at my usual hour, and after a tub felt ready for another day. Bates served me, as usual, a breakfast that gave a fair aspect to the morning. I was alert for any sign of perturbation in him; but I had already decided that I might as well look for emotion in a stone wall as in this placid, colorless serving man. I had no reason to suspect him of complicity in the night's affair, but I had no faith in him, and merely waited until he should show his hand.

By my plate next morning I found this note, written in a clear, bold, woman's hand:

"The Sisters of St. Agatha trust that the intrusion upon his grounds by Miss Armstrong, one of their students, has caused Mr. Glenarm no annoyance. The Sisters beg that this intrusion of their discipline will be overlooked, and they assure Mr. Glenarm that it will not recur."

An unnecessary apology! The note was of the best quality. At the head of the page "St. Agatha's, Annandale" was embossed in purple. One of the sisters I had seen beyond the wall undoubtedly wrote it—possibly Sister Theresa herself. A clever woman, that! Thoroughly capable of plucking money from gulleible old gentlemen! Poor Olivia! born for freedom, but doomed to a penitence existence with a lot of nuns! I resolved to send her a box of candy sometime just to annoy her guardians. Then my own affairs claimed attention.

"Bates," I asked, "do you know what Mr. Glenarm did with the plans for this house?"

He started slightly. I should not have noticed it if I had not been so keen for his answer.

"No, sir. I can't put my hand upon them, sir."

"That's all very well, Bates, but you didn't answer my question. Do you know where they are? I'll put my hand on them if you will kindly tell me where they're kept."

"I fear very much, Mr. Glenarm, that they have been destroyed. I tried to find them before you came, to tell you the whole truth, sir; but they must have been put out of the way."

"That's very interesting, Bates. Will you kindly tell me whom you suspect of destroying them? The town again, please."

His hand shook as he passed the plate.

"I hardly like to say, sir, when it's only a suspicion."

"Of course I shouldn't ask you to incriminate yourself, but I'll have to insist on my question. It may have occurred to you, Bates, that in a sense—in a sense, mind you—I'm the master here."

"Well, I should say, if you press me—that I fear Mr. Glenarm, your grandfather, burned the plans when he left here the last time. I hope you will pardon me, sir, for seeming to reflect upon him."

"Reflect upon the devil! What was his idea, do you suppose?"

"I think, sir, if you will pardon—"

"Don't be so fussy!" I snapped. "Damn your pardon, and go on!"

"He wanted you to study out the place for yourself, sir. It was dear to his heart, this house. He set his heart upon having you enjoy it."

"I like the word—go ahead."

"And I suppose there are things about it that he wished you to learn for yourself."

"You know them, of course, and are watching me when I'm hot and cold."

watching me to see when I'm hot and cold, like kids at a child's game."

The fellow turned and faced me across the table.

"Mr. Glenarm, as I hope God may be merciful to me in the last judgment, I don't know any more about it than you do."

"You were here with Mr. Glenarm all the time he was building the house, but you never saw walls built that weren't what they appeared to be, or doors made that didn't lead anywhere."

I summoned all my irony and contempt for this arraignment. He lifted his hand as though musingly.

"As God sees me, that is all true. I was here to care for the dead master's comfort and not to spy on him, sir."

"And Morgan, your friend, what about him?"

"I wish I knew, sir."

"I wish to the devil you did," and I flung out of the room and into the library.

At 11 o'clock I heard a pounding at the great front door and Bates came to announce a caller, who was now stamping the snow from his shoes audibly in the outer hall.

"The Reverend Paul Stoddard, sir."

The chaplain of St. Agatha's was a big fellow, as I had remarked on the occasion of his interview with Olivia Gladys Armstrong by the wall. His light brown hair was close-cut; his smooth shaven face was bright with the freshness of youth. Here was a sturdy young apostle without frills, but with a vigorous grip that left my hand tingling. His voice was deep and musical—a voice that suggested sincerity and inspired confidence.

"I'm afraid I haven't been neighborly, Mr. Glenarm. I was called away from home a few days ago after I heard of your arrival, and I have just got back. I flew in yesterday with the snow storm."

He folded his arms easily and looked at me with cheerful directness, as though politely speculating as to what manner of man I might be.

"It was a fine storm; I got a great day out of it," I said. "An Indian snow storm is something I have never experienced before."

"This is my second winter. I came out here because I wished to do some reading and thought I'd rather do it alone in a university."

"Studious habits are rather forced on one out here, I should say. In my own case my course of reading is all cut out for me."

"The Glenarm collection is famous—the best in the country, easily. Mr. Glenarm, your grandfather was certainly an enthusiast. I met him several times, though he was a trifle hard to meet!"—and the clergyman smiled.

"My grandfather had his whims; but he was a fine, generous-hearted old gentleman," I said.

"You haven't been on our side of the wall yet? Well, I promise not to molest your hidden treasure if you'll be neighborly," and he laughed merrily.

"I fear there's a big joke involved in the hidden treasure," I replied. "I'm so busy staying at home to guard it that I have no time for social recreation."

He looked at me quickly to see whether I was joking. His eyes were steady and earnest. The Reverend Paul Stoddard impressed me more and more agreeably. There was a suggestion of quiet strength about him that drew me to him.

"I suppose every one about here thinks of nothing but that I'm at Glenarm to earn my inheritance. My residence here must look pretty sordid from the outside."

"Mr. Glenarm's will is a matter of record in the county, of course. But you are too hard on yourself. It's nobody's business if your grandfather wished to visit his whims on you. I should say, in my own case, that I don't consider it any of my business what you are here for. I didn't come over to annoy you or to pry into your affairs. I get lonely now and then and thought I'd like to establish neighborly relations."

"Thank you; I appreciate your coming very much,"—and my heart warmed under the manifest kindness of the man.

"And I hope"—he spoke for the first time with restraint—"I hope nothing will prevent your knowing Sister Theresa and Miss Devereux. They are interesting and charming—the only women about here of your own social status."

My liking for him abated slightly. He might be a detective, representing the alternative heir, for all I knew and possibly Sister Theresa was a party to the conspiracy to drive me away.

"In time, no doubt, in time, I shall know them," I answered evasively.

"Oh, quite as you like!"—and he changed the subject. We talked of many things—of outdoor sports, with which he showed great familiarity; of universities, of travel and adventure. Columbia was his alma mater, but he had spent two years at Oxford.

"Well," he exclaimed, "this has been very pleasant, but I must run. I have just been over to see Morgan, the caretaker, at the resort village. The poor fellow accidentally shot himself yesterday cleaning his gun or something of that sort, and he has an ugly hole in his arm that will shut him up for a month or worse. He gave me an errand to do for him. He's a conscientious fellow and wished me to wire for him to Mr. Pickering that he'd been hurt, but was attending to his duties. Pickering owes a house at the farther end of the colony and Morgan has charge of it. You know Pickering, of course?"

I looked my clerical neighbor straight in the eye, a trifle coldly, perhaps. I was wondering why Morgan, with whom I had enjoyed a duel in my own cellar only a few hours before, should be reporting his injury to Arthur Pickering.

"I think I have seen Morgan about here," I said.

"Oh, yes! He's a woodsman and a hunter—our Nimrod of the lake."

"A good sort, very likely!"

"I dare say. He has sometimes brought me ducks during the season."

"To be sure! They shoot ducks at night—those hoosier hunters—so I hear!"

He laughed as he shook himself into his greatcoat.

"That's possible, though unsportsmanlike. But we don't have to look a gift mallard in the eye."

We laughed together. It was easy to laugh with him.

"By the way, I forgot to get Pickering's address from Morgan. If you happen to have it—"

"With pleasure," I said. "Alexis Building, Broadway, New York."

"Good! That's easy to remember," he said, smiling and turning up his coat collar. "Don't forget me; I'm quartered in a hermit's cell back of the chapel, and I believe we can find many matters of interest to talk about."

"I'm confident of it," I said, glad of the sympathy and cheer that seemed to emanate from his stalwart figure. I threw on my overcoat and walked to the gate with him and saw him hurry toward the village with long strides.

CHAPTER XII. I Explore a Passage.

"Bates!"—I found him busy replenishing the candlesticks in the library. It seemed to me that he was always poking about with an armful of candles—"there are a good many queer things in this world, but I guess you're one of the queerest. I don't mind telling you that there are times when I think you a thoroughly bad lot, and then again I question my judgment and don't give you credit for being much more than a dithering fool."

He was standing under a ladder beneath the great crystal chandelier and looked down upon me with that patient inquiry that is so appealing in a dog—in, say, the eyes of an Irish setter, when you accidentally step on his tail.

"Yes, Mr. Glenarm," he replied humbly.

"Now, I want you to grasp this idea that I'm going to dig into this old shelf top and bottom; I'm going to blow it up with dynamite, if I please; and if I catch you spying on me or reporting my doings to my enemies, or engaging in any questionable performances whatever, I'll hang you between the posts out there in the school wall—do you understand?"—so that the sweet Sisters of St. Agatha and the dear little school girls and the chaplain and all the rest will shudder through all their lives at the very thought of you."

"Certainly, Mr. Glenarm,"—and his tone was the same he would have used if I had asked him to pass me the matches, and under my breath I con signed him to the hardest tortures of the fiery pit.

"Now, as to Morgan—"

"Yes, sir."

"What possible business do you suppose he has with Mr. Pickering?" I demanded.

"Why, sir, that's clear enough. Mr. Pickering owns a house up the lake,—he got it through your grandfather. Morgan has the care of it, sir."

"Very plausible, indeed!"—and I sent him off to his work.

After luncheon I went to the end of the corridor, and began to sound the walls. They were as solid as rock, and responded dully to the strokes of the hammer. I sounded them on both sides, retracing my steps to the stairway, becoming more and more impatient at my ill-luck or stupidity. There was every reason why I should know my own house, and yet a stranger and an outlaw ran through it with amazing daring.

After an hour's idle search I returned to the end of the corridor, repeated all my previous soundings, and, I fear, indulged in language unbecoming a gentleman. Then, in my blind anger, I found what patient search had not disclosed.

I threw the hammer from me in a fit of temper and it struck one of the square blocks in the cement floor which gave forth a hollow sound. I was on my knees in an instant, my fingers searching the cracks, and drawing down close I could feel a current of air, slight but unmistakable, against my face.

The cement square, though exactly like the others in the cellar floor, was evidently only an imitation, with an opening beneath.

The block was fitted into its place with a nicety that testified to the skill of the hand that had adjusted it. I broke a blade of my pocket knife trying to pry it up, but, in a moment, I succeeded, and found it to be in reality a trap door, hinged to the substantial part of the floor.

A current of cool, fresh air, the same that had surprised me in the night, struck my face as I lay flat and peered into the opening. The lower passage was as black as pitch, and I lighted a lantern I had brought with me, found that wooden steps gave safe conduct below and went down.

I stood erect in the passage and had several inches to spare. It extended both ways, running back under the foundations of the house, and out squarely under the park before the house and toward the school wall. The air grew steadily fresher, until, after I had gone about two hundred yards, I reached a point where the wind seemed to beat down on me from above. I put up my hands and found two openings about three yards apart, through which the air sucked steadily. I moved out of the current with a chuckle in my throat and a grin on my face. I had passed under the gate in the school wall, and I knew now why the piers that held it had been built so high,—they were hollow and were the means of sending fresh air into the tunnel.

When I had traveled about twenty yards more I felt a slight vibration accompanied by a muffled roar, and almost immediately came to a rough wooden stair that marked the end of the passage. I had no means of judging directions, but I assumed that I was well within the school park.

I climbed the steps and in a moment stood blinking, my lantern in hand, in a small, floored room. Overhead the tumult and thunder of an organ explained the tremor and roar I had heard below. I was in the crypt of St. Agatha's chapel. The inside of the door by which I had entered was a part of the wainscoting of the room, and the opening was wholly covered with a map of the Holy Land.

It was all very strange and interesting. I looked at my watch and found that it was five o'clock, but I resolved to go into the chapel before going home.

The way up was clear enough, and I was soon in the vestibule. I opened the door, expecting to find a service in progress; but the little church was empty save where, at the right of the chancel, an organist was lifting the church with the notes of an exultant march. Cap in hand I stole forward, and sank down in one of the pews.

A lamp over the organ keyboard gave the only light in the chapel and made an aureole about her head,—about the uncovered head of Olivia Gladys Armstrong. I smiled as I recognized her and smiled, too, as I remembered her name. But the joy she brought to the music, the happiness in her face as she raised it in the minor harmonies, her isolation, marked by the little Isle of light against the dark background of the choir,—these things touched and moved me, and I bent forward, my arms upon the pew in front of me, watching and listening with a kind of awed wonder.

There was no pause in the outpouring of the melody. She changed stops and manuals with swift fingers and passed from one composition to another; now it was an august hymn, now a theme from Wagner, and finally Mendelssohn's spring song won the cold, dark chapel to light and warmth with its exultant notes.

She ceased suddenly with a little sigh and struck her hands together for the place was cold. As she reached up to put out the lights I stepped forward to the chancel steps.

"Please allow me to do that for you!"

She turned toward me, gathering a cape about her.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" she asked, looking about quickly. "I don't remember that you were invited."

"I didn't know I was coming myself," I remarked truthfully, lifting my hand to the lamp.

"That is my opinion of you,—that you're a rather unexpected person. But thank you, very much."

She showed no disposition to prolong the interview, but hurried toward the door, and reached the vestibule before I came up with her.

"You can't go any farther, Mr. Glenarm," she said, and waited as though to make sure I understood. Straight before us through the wood and beyond the school buildings the sunset faded sullenly. Night was following fast upon the gray twilight and already the holder planets were affime in the sky. The path led straight ahead beneath the black boughs.

"I might perhaps walk to the dormitory, or whatever you call it," I said.

"Thank you, no! I'm late and haven't time to bother with you. It's against the rules, you know, for us to receive visitors."

She stepped out upon the path.

"But I'm not a caller; I'm just a neighbor! And I owe you several calls, anyhow."

She laughed but did not pause and I followed a pace behind her.

"I hope you don't think for a moment that I chased a rabbit on your side of the fence in the hope of meeting you, do you, Mr. Glenarm?"

"He is far from me! I'm glad I came, though, for I liked your music immensely. I'm in earnest; I think it quite wonderful, Miss Armstrong."

She said no word to me.

"And I hope I may promise myself the pleasure of hearing you often."

"You are very kind about my poor music, Mr. Glenarm; but as I'm going away—"

I felt my heart sink a trifle. She was the only amusing person I had met at Glenarm, and the thought of losing her gave a darker note to the bleak landscape.

"That's really too bad! And just when we were getting acquainted! And I was coming to church Sunday to hear you play and to pray for snow, so you'd come over often to chase rabbits!"

This, I thought, softened her heart. At any rate her tone changed.

"I don't play for service; they're afraid to let me for fear I'll run comic opera tunes into the Te Deum!"

"How shocking!"

"Do you know, Mr. Glenarm,"—her tone became confidential and her pace slackened,—"we call you the squire, at St. Agatha's, and the lord of the manor, and names like that! All the girls are perfectly crazy about you. They'd be wild if they thought I talked with you, clandestinely. Is that the way you pronounce it?"

"Anything you say and any way you say it satisfies me," I replied.

"That's ever an nice of you," she said, mockingly again.

I felt foolish and guilty. She would probably get roundly scolded if the grave sisters learned of her talks with me, and very likely I should win their hearty contempt. But I did not turn back.

"I hope the reason you're leaving isn't—"

"Ill conduct?" Oh, yes, I'm terribly wicked, Squire Glenarm! They're sending me off—"

"But I suppose the Sisters are awfully strict!"

"They're—indeed—so—strict—like—"

Where is your heart? I asked, and she looked at me with a startled expression.

"Through you are dear! You want to know from my account how I came to Kentucky and I—"

Her girl would look to a shadow on the edge of a dew-wet leaf in the twilight of a winter day, as she came out my own spirit, whatever it was, please to call it. She had more than one reason—more Graces of the Rhine valley about her than I had adored French, Squire Glenarm! She concluded, breathlessly, and with no pause in her quick step.

"I adore you, Miss Armstrong," I asserted, yielding myself further to the joy of idleness, and delighting in the mockery and whimsical moods of her talk. I did not make her out, indeed, I preferred not to. I was not then, and I am not now, thank God!—of an analytical turn of mind. And as I grow older I prefer, even after many a blow, to take my fellow human beings as I find them. And as for women old or young, I envy no man his gift of resolving them into elements. As well carry a spray of arbutus to the laboratory or subject the enchantment of moonlight upon running water to the flame and blow pipe as try to analyze the heart of a girl,—particularly a girl who paddles a canoe with a sure stroke and puts up a good race with a rabbit.

A lamp shone ahead of us at the entrance of one of the houses and lights appeared in all the hallings.

"If I knew your window I should certainly sing under it,—except that you're going home! You didn't tell me why they were departing you."

"I'm really ashamed of! You would never—"

"Oh, yes, I would; I'm really an old friend!" I insisted, feeling more like a child every minute.

"Well, don't tell! But they caught me flirting with the grocery boy! Now aren't you disgusted?"

"Thoroughly! I can't believe it! Why, you'd a lot better flirt with me," I suggested boldly.

"Well, I'm to be sent away for good at Christmas. I may come back then if I can squeeze myself. My! That's slang,—isn't it adorable?"

"The Sisters don't like slang a sup pose?"

"They loathe it! Miss Devereux,—you know who she is!—she speaks on us and tells."

"You don't say so! But I'm not surprised at her! I've heard about her!" I declared bitterly.

We reached the door, and I expected her to fly, but she lingered.

"Oh, if you know her! Perhaps you're a spy, too! It's just as well we should never meet again. Mr. Glenarm," she declared laughingly.

"The memory of those few minutes will always linger with me. Miss Armstrong, I returned in an instant of her own tone."

"I shall soon to remember you," and she folded her arms under the cloak tragically.

"Our meetings have been all to few, Miss Armstrong. Two, exactly I have loved."

"Then you prefer to ignore the first time I ever saw you," she said, her hand on the door.

"Out there in your corner? Never! And you've forgiven me for overlooking you and the chaplain on the wall—please!"

She grasped the knob of the door and paused an instant as though pondering.

"I make it three times, without that one, and not counting once in the round and other times when you didn't know, Squire Glenarm! I'm a foolish little girl to have remembered the first. I see now how silly and I have been."

"Good-by!"

She opened and closed the door softly, and I heard her running up the steps within.

I ran back to the chapel, roundly abusing myself for having neglected my more serious affairs for a bit of silly talk with a school girl, fearful lest the opening I had left at both ends of the passage should have been discovered. Near the chapel I narrowly escaped running into Stoddard, but I slipped past him, found my lantern, pushed the hidden door into place, and, traversing the tunnel without incident, soon climbed through the hallway and slammed the false block securely into the opening.

OBITUARY.

It has pleased the great Ruler of the Universe to call from us Jennie Prince, the beloved wife of John P. Prince. She died January 12, 1907 at the age of nearly forty years. She was a daughter of Wm. G. and Malissa Large, her aged mother still survives. She was a member of the M. E. Church, for eleven years and was a good Christian woman.

She leaves a large family to mourn their loss. She told the doctor, J. C. Hall, she was ready to die, and the left bright hopes for the future and died with great Christian fortitude. This should be a great consolation to the bereaved and friends.

She told her husband a short while previous to her death that Jesus had called for her, and that she was willing to go, and died in peace. While she was with us she was always cheerful and contented, never failing to discharge every Christian duty. She was a good mother and leaves a host of friends. The funeral was preached by Rev. W. M. Copley.

The body was laid to rest in the family grave yard till the Lord's appointed time. We know by the promises of God that mother and wife only sleepeth, and is safe with the angels waiting for friends to come.

Special Notice.

As missionary of the American Sunday School Union, it is part of my duty to organize Sunday Schools where none exist; also to aid struggling schools in different ways. This work is strictly un denominational. It does not represent any church, but on the other hand is loyally supported by all evangelical denominations. I am in a position to render the most substantial help, free of charge, to new schools and also to poorly equipped schools. If there is not prospering very well, write me telling your needs, and I will take the matter up at once. This invitation is extended to any person in any community. Whether you are a Christian or not, if you want righteousness, morality and intelligence to have larger sway, tell us your wishes, let us know your needs. A postal card will convey all necessary information from you, then I will personally take up the work.

Home Circle Column.

A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as they Join the Home Circle.

The way never to have cloudy weather is to have sun inside of you.

When a man has no mind of his own, he can easily find a woman who will give him a piece of hers.

The roots of nine-tenths of the failures in integrity, the departures from honesty, the deceptions, the trickery, lie in the false standards of the home.

There are few things more tantalizing to a man than to go home with something on his mind he wants to tell about, and find company there, and be obliged to act agreeably.

If you would save your children from the effects of the trashy, sensational and ruinous literature that floods our land and poisons the mind of those who read it, you must not only banish it from your homes, but you must fill its place with good wholesome reading matter.

Gold is valuable because it is not easily found; jewels are precious because they are rare; violets are loved because they modestly conceal themselves. Girls lose half their charm because they are seen so much on the streets, and are found promiscuously mingled in all sorts of public assemblages. They should study the principle that makes the ruby precious and the violet dear.

Every school boy knows that kites will not fly unless there is a string tying it down. It is just so in life. The man who is tied down by a half a dozen blooming responsibilities and their mother will make a bigger, stronger flight than the boy, who, having nothing to keep him steady, is always floundering in the mud. If you want to ascend in the world, the yourself to somebody.

One of the best resolutions we have heard of anybody making is this: Not to speak of mistakes that make no difference; how often the harmony of a home is destroyed by the persistent member of the household who will argue half an hour over the point whether Aunt Jane came on Tuesday or on Wednesday. We have listened to heated disputes that cast an ugly shadow over the whole meal, or spoiled an evening's enjoyment, upon subjects that are of no more importance than the state of last week's weather.

All other earthly pleasures are a mockery in comparison to the contentment of a loving family circle. Other joys may last for a day, excite our interest for a time, but they fade away and leave us unsatisfied. While they are present we feel not the emptiness of this excitement, but with their vanishing our hearts hunger; for the blessings which home alone can give. Even they who have never known what it is to have loving hearts welcome them on the threshold, and loving hands minister to their comfort, know that these are life's most precious gifts and thirst for a draught from this cup of peace.

If men would remember that a woman can't always be smiling who has to cook dinner, answer the door bell half a dozen times, and get rid of a neighbor who has dropped in, attend to a sick baby, tie up the cut finger of a two-year-old, gather up the play-things of a four-year-old, tie up the feet of a six-year-old on skates and get an eight-year-old ready for school—to say nothing of sweeping, cleaning, etc. A woman with all this to contend with may claim it as a privilege to look and feel a little tired sometimes, and a word of sympathy would not be too much to expect from a man who, during the honeymoon, wouldn't let her carry so much as a sunshade.

Home is the one place in all the world where hearts are sure of each other. It is the place where we wear off the mask of guarded and suspicious coldness which the world forces us to wear in self-defense, where we pour out the unreserved communications of full and confident hearts. It is the place where expressions of tenderness rush out without any expression of awkwardness and without any dread of ridicule. Let a man travel where he will, home is the place to which "his heart untroubled fondly turns." He is to do all his pleasure there. He is to divide all pain. A happy home is the single spot of rest which a man has on earth for the cultivation of his noblest sentiments.

The truest, best and sweetest type of the girl of today does not come from the home of wealth, she steps out from the house where is comfort rather than luxury. She belongs to the great middle class—that class which has given us the best wifehood, which has given helpmates to the foremost men of our time, which teaches its daughters the true meaning of love, which teaches the manners of the drawing room and the practical life of the kitchen as well as teaches its girls the responsibilities of wifehood and the greatness of motherhood. These girls may not ride in their carriages, they do not wear the most expensive gowns, they may even help to enlarge the family income. But these self same girls are the great bulwark of society, not only of the present but of the future.

SLANDER.

He who can choke the sweet flowers of social love, and taint them with disease, or in the paradise of earthly bliss, where the plants of virtue flourish, spread the blight and mildew of desolation hatred and distrust—who can crush his neighbor's fame to dust, and build on its ruins—who can write infamy on the brow of others, to prove his own purity, is neither man nor beast, but a heartless fiend. Those who have seen their dearest interest tampered with, who know what it is to have the priceless gem of a good name sullied by the poisonous breath of cold, unflinching slander, these best can say, he has no heart. If the lightning's flash ever darts from heaven to strike the guilty down, it will blast the hope of murderers such as these.

The season is now on and it will soon be time to sow seed and prepare ground for cultivation. The Company hopes to make this the biggest run the factory has ever had, and asks the assistance of the farmers in his enterprise.

Two persons were killed and nine injured when a three-story building in Cincinnati collapsed. The foundations were weakened by the flood in the Ohio river, and the walls gave way without warning. One man is missing and may be dead in the ruins.

Near Monroe, La., and without awakening even those whose residences faced the scene, fifty men lynched two young negroes, Flint Williams and Henry Gardner, by hanging them. A few hours previously the negroes had confessed to shooting and killing one Italian, and mortally wounding another here Monday night, and Gardner, in addition, had confessed to having entered the room of Miss Jesse Bumpus with criminal intent. Both men were twenty-two years of age.

A Center Shot.

Harry Sommers, of Elizabethtown, made a center shot with the following, editorial judging from the way it has been going the rounds of the Kentucky Press:

There are more young men in the penitentiaries in this country learning trades than there are outside of them learning trades. The principal cause of this is that we are educating our young men for idle gentlemen, trying to make lawyers, preachers, doctors, and clerks out of material that is needed for blacksmiths, carpenters, merchants, and other honest 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.' It is a mistake and a big one, to teach the boys and girls to believe that labor is disgraceful and to do nothing for a living is more becoming society. It is rotten to the core and is ruining the country today, there are sons and daughters who are now being educated to play the 'leading lady,' and 'walking gentleman,' in the great drama of life, who will light out for the poorhouse or the penitentiary before the curtain drops on the last sad act of the play to which they have been educated by their too indulgent parents.

STIMULATE THE BLOOD.

Brandreth's Pills are the great blood purifier. They are a laxative and blood tonic, they act equally on the bowels, the kidneys and the skin, thus cleansing the system by the natural outlet of the body. They stimulate the blood so as to enable nature to throw off all morbid humors and cure all troubles arising from an impure state of the blood. One or two taken every night will prove an invaluable remedy.

Each pill contains one grain of solid extract of sarsaparilla, which, with other valuable vegetable products, make it a blood purifier of excellent character.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century and are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar-coated.

Seldom
Wear Out

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills relieve pain—not only once, but as many times as it is necessary to take them. Many persons who suffer from chronic ailments find in them a source of great relief from the suffering which they would otherwise be compelled to endure. Their soothing influence upon the nerves strengthen rather than weaken them. For this reason they seldom lose their effectiveness.

"I am 62 years old and have suffered for 42 years from nervous troubles, rheumatism and neuralgia, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, and pain around the heart. The Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have been a blessing to me. I don't know what I should do without them, and they are the only remedy I have ever used that either did not wear out in less time than I have been using them, or else the injurious results were such that I would be obliged to cease their use."

MRS. B. C. ROBINSON,
27 Cedar St., Chattanooga, Tenn.

UNAPPRECIATIVE

It is somewhat disconcerting when a girl is young and sweet and you have praised her taper fingers and her dainty little feet. And have raved about her lashes and the color of her eyes. And expressed the firm opinion that she is a perfect prize. I say—

A double tragedy at Heller, Pike county, occurred last Sunday. The beginning of this affair was in Virginia when one Frank Dutton, dressed with a girl named Alene Rose. They came to Pike county, followed by Sam Rose, a brother of the girl. Rose met Dutton a short distance from the Greenough Coal and Coke Company's plant and shot him dead. Continuing his way to the house where he supposed his sister was living he met Elias Dutton, a brother of the man he had just killed. A pistol duel followed the meeting, and Rose fell, dying in a few moments. Dutton, though seriously wounded, escaped.

On the 7th of Jan., 1907, I paid my taxes to Deputy Sheriff J. H. Sturgill and have his receipt for the same. Much Dissatisfaction.

There were many public sales of land for taxes last Monday and there was a great deal of dissatisfaction and much indignation expressed. Men from all parts of the county were here, a large number of them holding receipts from a sheriff for taxes on the lands advertised for sale. There should be some way of preventing such confusion as this.

The Virginia Railway Co. has been chartered at Richmond, Va., by the interests which are building the Tidewater Railway through that State, this action being a change of name and for a merger. The new charter authorizes an increase in the capital stock from $100,000 to $325,000. This is the road which is being built by H. H. Rogers, of New York and others, and the West Virginia end of it is known as the Deepwater Railway, but a meeting of the Deepwater Railway Co. is to be held at Austed, W. Va., on April 22, for the purpose of conveying its property, rights and franchises to the Tidewater Railway Co. What that is done the two companies, which are practically one and the same, will be known by the new name of the Virginia Railway Co. The Virginian Terminal Railway Co., of Norfolk, has also chartered for the Tidewater terminals at that city.

The change of name does not mean any change in the officers, according to a report from Richmond, but the plans of the company will be carried out, as heretofore announced to build a line from the Kanawha river in West Virginia to the Chesapeake bay. The main purpose is the development of coal fields in the Gauley Mountain region around Ansted, W. Va., and while it has been rumored that the company proposes to build an extension westward to a point on one of the Great Lakes, an officer of the company is quoted as saying that such an extension is to be regarded only as a possibility of the future. Already, however, surveys have been made for an extension from Surveyor Station to the Ohio river, about 50 or 100 miles. About 60 miles of track have been completed on the Deepwater Railway from Deepwater, on the Kanawha river, to Mullens, W. Va., and this is being operated. On the Tidewater Railway in Virginia 60 miles of track are also in operation between Jarratt and Algona, the latter point being near Suffolk.

Among the new laws enacted by the legislature, which has not received the proper amount of notice, was the passage of the new ballot law. The new law aims to correct some of the features of the old ballot law under which so many ballots were thrown out on account of trifling irregularities. At the head of each party ticket is a large square. The man who intends to vote a straight ticket will hereafter be able to do so by simply putting a cross in the square at the head of the ticket. He does not have to scratch out three or four other tickets, and watch carefully to be sure that he draws lines from top to bottom, from stem to stern and from center to circumference through them all, on the contrary, voting it straight will be simplicity itself.

A small square will appear after the name of each candidate, and to vote for a particular candidate the voter need only put a mark after his name. No tedious writing in is required. It will be seen that the whole process of voting is made easier and simpler, and therefore fairer. The law seems to be a good one. Senator Hatfield is its author.--Ex.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

Report of Lawrence County Delegation to State Meeting.

Big Sandy News—

Thinking it likely that some of your readers might be interested in the Second Kentucky Farmers' Institute held at Shelbyville, Ky., on Feb. 26-27-28 under the auspices of the Kentucky department of Agriculture, I will briefly try to give an account of the most prominent features as discussed by experts along such lines, as corn breeding, by C. G. Williams, of Ohio, expert on the Kentucky department of Agriculture, pure foods, by Prof. R. M. Allen, Kentucky Experiment Station. Farm sanitation by Dr. A. T. McCormack. Purpose of the Kentucky breeding bureau by Jack House. A movement for clean milk illustrated with stereoscopic views, by Prof. C. H. Lane, Chief of Dairy Division, U. S. Department of Agriculture. Baby beef and baby lambs by Joe E. Wing, of Ohio. The best types of cattle by Joe E. Wing and J. J. Hooper, Dairy Cattle by C. H. Lane, Washington, D. C., and Prof. M. A. Seaville, Kentucky Experiment Station. Alfalfa growing and its value as a feed by Joe E. Wing, of Ohio, was treated of in all its various details. Many other subjects pertaining to farm interests, farm life, and a better condition for the farming classes in Kentucky were discussed by able and eloquent practical speakers, but I shall attempt at this time to notice only the above mentioned few, as one of which was worth to any farmer all the expense that was attached to an attendance of the three days and we regret very much that the attendance from the whole Sandy Valley was so limited.

Corn breeding by Prof. C. G. Williams was a most interesting feature of the whole institute. This was illustrated by charts, showing not what was possible, but what had actually been done by the use of good and highly bred seed corn. Also illustrated the loss incurred by the farmer who plants seed corn, fertilized by the poison from smutty and barren stalks.

Farm sanitation by Dr. McCormack was treated in a masterly way and showed how we may get rid of many diseases by a thoroughly clean system on our farms and about our homes.

Apert House, Chairman of the Breeding Bureau, read a lengthy paper on the work of the Breeding Bureau which he said thirty thoroughbred stallions had been placed in different parts of the State, and that the Bureau expected to place one such horse in every county in the State. When this scheme is more fully worked it will surely make Kentucky the greatest horse producing district in the world. The use of these thoroughbred stallions is virtually a free gift to the farmers of the State.

Alfalfa milk by Prof. Lane, illustrated, showing the untold millions of disease germs in unclean milk was one of the most interesting lectures of the whole institute. Babies fed on such milk had a death rate of forty-four to the hundred. While one of one hundred fed on pure clean milk only eighteen died.

Joe E. Wing, Mechanicsburg, Ohio, makes his baby beef and baby lambs on alfalfa hay mostly, generally feeding 1400 lambs for market from his 100 acres of alfalfa.

Beef and dairy types of cattle were brought on the stage and were judged by expert judges of each type. A 15-months old short horn steer, weighing 1,000 lbs., was one representative of the beef breeds and judged by the score card system made a score of 96 points. The dairy type was the Jersey and scored 91 points, 1100 lbs. being perfect. Prof. Seaville, of Ky., Experiment Station, judging the dairy breeds and Prof. C. H. Lane, of U. S. Agricultural Department, Washington, assisting.

Joe E. Wright and Prof. J. J. Hooper judged the best types. Many other farm topics were on the programme and discussed which have neither time nor space in your paper to mention.

The institute was held in the Opera House in Shelbyville, which has a seating capacity of something like 600 and, at each session was well filled. About two-thirds of the committee were represented by delegates. Members of the State Board of Agriculture were elected from the first and third districts. G. M. Mettrew, of Lexington county, for first district and Guthrie for the third district. A resolution was unanimously adopted endorsing the proposed law.

State Dairymen's Association was organized with a membership mostly local to the sections surrounding the cities of Louisville, Lexington, and Covington.

These meetings are of most vital worth to any farmer, and we hope to see a delegation numbered by the score turn out to Kentucky's Farmers' State Institute in 1908.

MAYOR OF SUNBURY Says Peruna is a Good Medicine.

Hon. C. C. Brooks, Mayor of Sunbury, Ohio, also Attorney for Farmers' Bank and Sunbury Building and Loan Co. writes:

"I have the utmost confidence in the virtue of Peruna. It is a great medicine. I have used it and I have known many of my friends who have obtained beneficial results from its use. I cannot praise Peruna too highly."

HON. C. C. BROOKS.

THESE are a host of petty ailments which are the direct result of the weather.

This is more true of the excessive heat of summer and the intense cold of winter, but is partly true of all seasons of the year.

Whether it be a cold or a cough, catarrh of the head or nasal complaint, whether the liver is affected or the kidneys, the cause is very liable to be the same.

The weather slightly deranges the mucous membranes of the organs and the result is some functional disease. Peruna has become a standby in thousands of homes for minor ailments of this sort.
